

Table of contents

I Introduction

Sylvie Hancil, Margje Post and Alexander Haselow

1 Introduction: Final particles from a typological perspective — 3

II Discourse Analysis & Conversation Analysis

Pedro Ureña Gómez-Moreno

2 Sentence-final adverbials: Recurrent types and usage — 39

Aino Koivisto

3 Taking an interactional perspective on final particles: The case of Finnish mutta ('but') — 55

Alexander Haselow

4 Final particles in spoken German — 77

III Grammaticalization

Bernd Heine, Gunther Kaltenböck and Tania Kuteva

5 Some observations on the evolution of final particles — 111

Yuki Taylor

6 The evolution of Japanese toka in utterance-final position — 141

Rumiko Shinzato

7 Two types of conditionals and two different grammaticalization paths — 157

Sung-Ock Sohn

8 The emergence of utterance-final particles in Korean — 181

Sylvie Hancil

9 The grammaticalization of final but: From conjunction to final particle — 197

IV Cognitive Approaches

Ton van der Wouden and Ad Foolen

- 10 Dutch particles in the right periphery — 221

Thorstein Fretheim

- 11 A relevance-theoretic perspective on the Norwegian utterance-final particles da and altså compared to their English counterpart then — 249

Margje Post

- 12 The North Russian utterance-final particle dak as an information-structuring device — 285

Denis Paillard

- 13 A study of three particles in Khmer: tiv, mɔɔk, coh — 305

V Generative Approaches

Gabriela Soare

- 14 Particles and Parameters in Wh-Questions — 333

Francesca Del Gobbo, Nicola Munaro and Cecilia Poletto

- 15 On sentential particles: A cross-linguistic study — 359

Kaori Takamine

- 16 Circumstantial PPs and the middle field in Japanese — 387

Laura R. Bailey

- 17 Word order and the syntax of question particles — 407

Subject index — 427

Author index — 432